

Winter Baseball Tournament For Cities In the Southwest Is Planned

Game Fight Is Expected Sunday

Halford and Daley In Condition

WHAT is expected, according to general opinion of fight fans, to even off the famous Gage-Thorne battle in evenly matched fighting qualities, and billed to be a 20 round bout, is the contest between Max Halford and Pete Daley for the welterweight title of the southwest. Sunday afternoon at the Insane arena. Present indications are that the fight will be one of the most evenly matched fistic events staged in the arena for some time, each principal having trained to a point of physical perfection.

Cleverness, slugging and clean punching are natural assets of both contestants, and with the exception of a few pounds in weight, they are matched evenly in footwork, and both are hard hitters. Unwilling to take any chances on his hands being injured, Halford did only light work Saturday afternoon. "Kid" Heimers, the featherweight, boxed two fast rounds with the ex-sailor Daley and this, coupled with light shadow boxing and rope skipping, wound up his program for the afternoon. Halford, according to Fred Sloan, his manager, looks much better than he did in his last fight, a match with Joe Herriek, the Keweenaw middleweight, and is confident of defeating Daley before the limit.

Working for speed only, Daley did only light work Saturday afternoon. The westerner is in fine condition and is confident of the outcome of the battle. Daley is a clever, hard punching

Pete Daley, the Phoenix Welterweight

CACTUS BOWLERS ROLL CLOSE GAMES

Wals and Tuttle Quintets Divide Points in First Match—White and Holmes Teams Also Break Even.

Ample evidence that there will be some hard fought battles in the Cactus Bowling league this season was given Friday when two of the most evenly matched games, ever witnessed were rolled. Wals's five divided the points with the Tuttle league leaders, while the White and Holmes quintets made an even break in the final games.

Sixteen pins constituted the margin of the first game in favor of the Wals team. Joe Bryan rolled high game, 235 and Hugh Briesch high total, 499. Briesch made a strikeout. Scott White rolled high game in the second match, and Edwards high total with 522. O. A. Critchett made a strikeout. The scores:

Wals team	Tis.
H. Briesch	201
R. W. Ford	186
L. S. Callahan	157
J. M. Paul	153
W. J. Bryan	202
Totals	899
Tuttle team	Tis.
E. L. Clark	144
W. Johnston	200
W. Foster	145
D. L. Hill	145
A. W. Houck	151
Totals	885

White team	Tis.
Ed Schutz	192
A. Foster	141
W. Grandover	141
J. T. Edwards	191
Scott White	202
Totals	867
Holmes team	Tis.
J. A. Wampler	159
C. L. Holmes	139
H. Wood	164
A. Critchett	132
I. L. Lehman	159
Totals	893

PLAYERS' FRATERNITY REELECTS DAVID FULTZ FOR PRESIDENT

New York, Oct. 17.—At the annual meeting of the Baseball Players' Fraternity, David L. Fultz was elected president. Raymond W. Collins, Brooklyn Nationals, vice president; John P. Henry, Washington Americans, vice president; John B. Henry, Pittsburgh Pirates, vice president; Edward M. Reulbach, Brooklyn Nationals, secretary.

The advisory board consists of Raymond W. Collins, Jacob E. Daubert, David L. Fultz, John B. Henry and John B. Miller.

The board of directors for the coming year include: W. J. Barbeau, Eros B. Barger, Fred T. Beck, Wm. J. Bradley, Tyrus R. Cobb, John Collins, Raymond W. Collins, Samuel E. Crawford, Jacob E. Daubert, Otto Deiser, Michael J. Doohan, Richard J. Egan,

SCOOP THE CUB REPORTER

The Boss May Be Crazy, But He's Got Good Common Sense

"Kid" Pavo and "Kid" Williams, the semi-windup principals, did the usual amount of work Friday afternoon, but will go through a drying out process Saturday afternoon. The little fellows are in good physical condition and this fight promises to be interesting.

"Batling" Chico, a Los Angeles bantamweight and contender for the 116 pound title, arrived in El Paso Friday afternoon, and will remain here for several days in anticipation of a match with Benny Chavez, Bobbie Burns, or any other southwestern selection of the promoters. Earl Mohan, trainer and manager of Chico, who is well known in El Paso, left Albuquerque for Los Angeles, where he will train Bud Anderson, the Oregon lightweight.

Chico recently knocked out "Spider" Moffatt, the Oklahoma bantamweight, in one round at Albuquerque. He has fought two draws with Benji, and knocked out the Rocky mountain champion in two rounds. He is being championed around town by Harry Atwood, the clever coast boxer.

It is reported that the promoters are hunting around for another easy mark for Joe Rivers, the California lightweight. A prominent expert on the coast believes that Rivers is afraid to meet any of the lightweighters of prominence, but would rather fight a little boxer like Dundee or a green, unseasoned boy like Joe Azevedo. Rivers is afraid of Jack Britton in the general opinion on the coast, although the weight is exactly the same.

George Chip, the Pennsylvania middleweight who knocked out Frank Klaus in the sixth round, at Pittsburgh, is being deluged with theatrical offers and contracts. He has refused all of them, so he declares. His first appearance after he knocked out Klaus was as referee of a six round contest in Pittsburgh.

Umpire Bob Emslie was hit four times in one of the games of the inter-city championship series of the Naps and Pirates. First a bat slipped and hit him on the leg. Three foul tips escaped the catcher and struck him on the mask. The third time the ball struck with such force that his scalp was cut just above the temple.

Kid Graves, the Milwaukee welterweight, claimant of the welterweight title, strengthened his claims when he outpointed Mike Glover of Boston in a 10 round bout at New York city. Glover recently defeated Young Denny of New Orleans.

Players of the St. Louis Browns who participated in the recent inter-city series, which the Cardinals will only receive $17 and a fraction for their efforts during the series. The whole six games only drew $8000 at the gate. Less than $1700 was received to divide between the players. Which was split 24 ways. George Stovall, former manager of the club, drew down one share.

Kid Williams and his manager, Sammy Harris, will start for the Pacific coast in a few days, where Williams is booked to meet Campi, in the second week of December. Williams expects to trim Campi, and then go after the featherweights. Harris has received several offers from clubs in the middle-west.

The Chicago Cubs have not yet decided upon their allotment of $14,559.05, which is their share of the recent series with the White Sox. Twenty-four players are eligible. The prorata distribution among the Cubs will probably be $528.15. In 1912 the Cubs received each $67.81.

It is reported that the Kansas City Federal league club has offered George Stovall an annual salary, with a three year contract, $2500, with a bonus of $5000 to $10,000, to be paid when he signs the contract. Stovall has threatened to become an outlaw unless he receives his unconditional release from St. Louis.

Garry Hermann, president of the Cincinnati Reds, has announced that Joe Tinker will manage the team in 1914. Slight restrictions, it is said, will be put on Tinker's personal authority, as he will have charge of the team in the field, but will have to confer with Hermann in all deals.

It is considered by eastern sporting critics that as Jeff Smith, the Bayonne middleweight, fought Georges Carpentier a fairly even fight and lost the decision, what chance would Carpentier have with Genbo Smith or Frank Moran. Smith is considered a third rater in America. Carpentier is now matched to meet Bombardier Wells again for a purse of $20,000.

Manager McCreddie, manager of the Portland Beavers, who have practically clinched the pennant in the Coast league, has turned out 25 players to the major leagues in the past eight years that have made good. This is an average of a little more than three each year. McCreddie is also noted for his pennant winning pedigree.

Monday evening the ball inaugurating the season of 1913-14 will be rolled at the Wigwam alleys. Eight teams have entered the league. The Ford and Springer five-men teams will meet in the first match on Monday, October 20.

The following teams are entered: Sherman team—Sherman, Capt.; H. Henry, N. Taylor, J. Binford, I. Senenbock, W. H. Edgington. Ford team—Ford, Capt.; C. Heidrick, McCreddie, Armstrong, Harrison team—Harrison, Capt.; McCreddie, K. Paschal, Zarate, S. Paschal. Springer team—Springer, Capt.; Goodwin, Peale, Deak, Bozue. Bailey team—Bailey, Capt.; Galenlin, Nagle, H. Call, Clark. Tuttle team—Tuttle, Capt.; Valenzuela, Watson, Williams, G. Roberts. Clark team—Clark, Capt.; Martin, O'Brien, Avina, Johnson. James team—James, Capt.; Rodriguez, Slosson, sr., Lee Davis, H. Taylor.

WOMEN GOLF CHAMPIONS TO PLAY FINALS SATURDAY

Wilmington, Del., Oct. 18.—Miss Marie Holles, New York metropolitan champion, and Miss Gladys Ravenscroft, of England, former British holder, won their matches Friday in the semi-finals round for the women's national golf championship at the Wilmington country club, which today in the final for the American title.

FOOTBALL RESULTS.

At Lawrence Kas—Haskell, 60; College of Emporia, 0. At Okaloosa, Fla.—Des Moines College, 2; Penn College of Okaloosa, 0. At Moscow, Ida.—University of Idaho, 6; Washington State, 0.

WINTER BALL FOR SOUTHWEST LIKELY

Movement on Foot to Organize Winter Baseball With El Paso, Phoenix, Mesa, Miami, Tucson and Douglas.

Phoenix, Ariz., Oct. 18.—A movement has been started in Phoenix for the formation of a winter baseball league, composed of teams from Phoenix, Mesa, Miami, Tucson, Douglas and El Paso. Joe Kehoe, manager of the local team, will send out letters within a few days. Transportation costs will be high. The league says that the rate receipts will take care of every expense, except the pay that must be given the players. He and a committee of fans called on the board of trade to ascertain what that organization will do toward supporting the team.

Kehoe expects to make the El Paso Mavericks an offer to come to Phoenix for a series of games during the week of the state fair. He has received a letter from Bill Crawford, manager of the Mavericks, asking for terms.

CHICAGO FANS FOLLOW SOX ON WORLD TOUR

Chicago, Ill., Oct. 18.—The Chicago White Sox baseball club, Chicago champions, led by manager James Callahan, left last night for Cincinnati, O., where they were scheduled to play the New York Nationals today in the first game of a baseball tour of the world.

President Comiskey and a large number of reporters accompanied the team to Cincinnati. The probable lineup for the Sox is as follows: White Sox—Yaver, shortstop; Schaefer, third base; Chase, first base; Crawford, right field; Bodie, center field; Callahan or Speaker, left field; Berger, second base; Schaik or Daly, catcher; Benz, Scott, Leverenz or Russell, pitcher.

New York—Snodgrass, center field; Magee, left field; Lobert, third base; Doyle, second base; Merkle, first base; Thorpe, right field; Doolan, shortstop; Meyers or Wingo, catcher; Mathewson, Tetreau, Fromme, Perdus or Hearn, pitcher.

COAST LEAGUE.

At Los Angeles—Portland, 6; Los Angeles, 12. At Sacramento—Venice, 5; Sacramento, 7. At San Francisco—San Francisco, 0; Oakland, 2.

Where They Play Sunday.

Portland 106 80 573
Sacramento 98 91 522
Venice 103 97 519
San Francisco 97 100 492
Los Angeles 95 103 486
Oakland 86 114 428

Where They Play Saturday.

San Francisco at Oakland.
Venice at Sacramento.
Portland at Los Angeles.

NEW YORK GIANTS START ON ROUND THE WORLD TOUR

New York, Oct. 18.—A number of National league baseball players, including members of the New York Giants, have left New York under the direction of John J. McGraw, for Chicago, where on Sunday, in connection with the White Sox squad, they will officially start their round the world baseball trip.

KILBANE AND MARX WILL FIGHT AT CINCINNATI OCT. 30

Cincinnati, Ohio, Oct. 18.—It is announced here that Johnny Kilbane, of Cleveland, the featherweight champion, and Knockout Marx, of this city, have been matched to meet in a 10 round boxing contest here October 30.

sort of practice that is necessary may be extracted from the painstaking study of Mr. Travers. It has been reported that he would frequently go out on the links with his pocket full of balls, armed only with a niblick. He would then place the ball in most impossible spots and study the results from each stroke. Another day he would take out a masher, another a mid-iron, and so on down the list of clubs, until he learned exactly what he might expect to accomplish from any odd point off the fair green.

Compared with most other players, Mr. Travers can be depended on to get into difficulties less often than anyone I have ever seen play, yet he has made himself a past master of traps and bunkers, and is never embarrassed by any situation.

For the beginner who has not yet acquired sufficient skill to beat a card of one hundred for a round hole, advice is rather to be sure of getting out on the fair green than to try for distance or any definite point. In doing this, however, try to remember exactly what happens on the stroke and store it away carefully in the mind for reference next time you are called upon to make a similar effort. In this way you can derive benefits from your early practice, which otherwise would go for little or nothing.

The very best of players find themselves in tough spots every now and then and time you are called upon to make a judgment in order to get out of their predicament without seriously marring their card, losing a hole.

They have the advantage over the duffer in a number of ways. They have been in similar spots before, and know what club to use and what strength they can effectively apply on the stroke without danger of getting into a still worse mess. They can quickly decide whether to play backwards, sideways, or toward the hole, and then by a slight shift in the means of getting to the green sometimes go down for a half with bobby, and at worst only lose a single stroke for their wild shot.

In the golfing championship of the United States, played at Baltusrol some years ago, one of the leading professionals, in playing the ninth hole there, hooked his ball into the clump of woods. He was a man who had a reputation to sustain, and would not play backwards or sideways, so kept hitting first one tree and then another, and so took seven or eight strokes. (I forget which) on a par three hole, on the theory "that a pro never plays backwards." The hole in question is one of about 180 yards along a side hill. A simple stroke toward the fair green, and he could have scored a four, several strokes under what he actually got.

In the qualifying round of the amateur championship several years ago at Garden City, Marshall Whitlatch, one of the most promising players in the metropolitan district, met with grave misfortune in playing the 160 yard 18th hole. The drive is over a pond to a large rolling fair green with two deep traps cut in its face and others at the back of it. Whitlatch drove into one of the traps, then chopped out into another until he had consumed 15 strokes on the hole, which prevented him from qualifying. In playing the same hole in the qualifying round Jerome D. Travers reached the depths of one of these traps from the tee. He calmly picked out under penalty of two strokes, laid his fourth dead, and went down in a five.

Perhaps a slight indication of the

sort of practice that is necessary may be extracted from the painstaking study of Mr. Travers. It has been reported that he would frequently go out on the links with his pocket full of balls, armed only with a niblick. He would then place the ball in most impossible spots and study the results from each stroke. Another day he would take out a masher, another a mid-iron, and so on down the list of clubs, until he learned exactly what he might expect to accomplish from any odd point off the fair green.

Compared with most other players, Mr. Travers can be depended on to get into difficulties less often than anyone I have ever seen play, yet he has made himself a past master of traps and bunkers, and is never embarrassed by any situation.

For the beginner who has not yet acquired sufficient skill to beat a card of one hundred for a round hole, advice is rather to be sure of getting out on the fair green than to try for distance or any definite point. In doing this, however, try to remember exactly what happens on the stroke and store it away carefully in the mind for reference next time you are called upon to make a similar effort. In this way you can derive benefits from your early practice, which otherwise would go for little or nothing.

The very best of players find themselves in tough spots every now and then and time you are called upon to make a judgment in order to get out of their predicament without seriously marring their card, losing a hole.

They have the advantage over the duffer in a number of ways. They have been in similar spots before, and know what club to use and what strength they can effectively apply on the stroke without danger of getting into a still worse mess. They can quickly decide whether to play backwards, sideways, or toward the hole, and then by a slight shift in the means of getting to the green sometimes go down for a half with bobby, and at worst only lose a single stroke for their wild shot.

In the golfing championship of the United States, played at Baltusrol some years ago, one of the leading professionals, in playing the ninth hole there, hooked his ball into the clump of woods. He was a man who had a reputation to sustain, and would not play backwards or sideways, so kept hitting first one tree and then another, and so took seven or eight strokes. (I forget which) on a par three hole, on the theory "that a pro never plays backwards." The hole in question is one of about 180 yards along a side hill. A simple stroke toward the fair green, and he could have scored a four, several strokes under what he actually got.

In the qualifying round of the amateur championship several years ago at Garden City, Marshall Whitlatch, one of the most promising players in the metropolitan district, met with grave misfortune in playing the 160 yard 18th hole. The drive is over a pond to a large rolling fair green with two deep traps cut in its face and others at the back of it. Whitlatch drove into one of the traps, then chopped out into another until he had consumed 15 strokes on the hole, which prevented him from qualifying. In playing the same hole in the qualifying round Jerome D. Travers reached the depths of one of these traps from the tee. He calmly picked out under penalty of two strokes, laid his fourth dead, and went down in a five.

Perhaps a slight indication of the

sort of practice that is necessary may be extracted from the painstaking study of Mr. Travers. It has been reported that he would frequently go out on the links with his pocket full of balls, armed only with a niblick. He would then place the ball in most impossible spots and study the results from each stroke. Another day he would take out a masher, another a mid-iron, and so on down the list of clubs, until he learned exactly what he might expect to accomplish from any odd point off the fair green.

Compared with most other players, Mr. Travers can be depended on to get into difficulties less often than anyone I have ever seen play, yet he has made himself a past master of traps and bunkers, and is never embarrassed by any situation.

For the beginner who has not yet acquired sufficient skill to beat a card of one hundred for a round hole, advice is rather to be sure of getting out on the fair green than to try for distance or any definite point. In doing this, however, try to remember exactly what happens on the stroke and store it away carefully in the mind for reference next time you are called upon to make a similar effort. In this way you can derive benefits from your early practice, which otherwise would go for little or nothing.

The very best of players find themselves in tough spots every now and then and time you are called upon to make a judgment in order to get out of their predicament without seriously marring their card, losing a hole.

They have the advantage over the duffer in a number of ways. They have been in similar spots before, and know what club to use and what strength they can effectively apply on the stroke without danger of getting into a still worse mess. They can quickly decide whether to play backwards, sideways, or toward the hole, and then by a slight shift in the means of getting to the green sometimes go down for a half with bobby, and at worst only lose a single stroke for their wild shot.

In the golfing championship of the United States, played at Baltusrol some years ago, one of the leading professionals, in playing the ninth hole there, hooked his ball into the clump of woods. He was a man who had a reputation to sustain, and would not play backwards or sideways, so kept hitting first one tree and then another, and so took seven or eight strokes. (I forget which) on a par three hole, on the theory "that a pro never plays backwards." The hole in question is one of about 180 yards along a side hill. A simple stroke toward the fair green, and he could have scored a four, several strokes under what he actually got.

In the qualifying round of the amateur championship several years ago at Garden City, Marshall Whitlatch, one of the most promising players in the metropolitan district, met with grave misfortune in playing the 160 yard 18th hole. The drive is over a pond to a large rolling fair green with two deep traps cut in its face and others at the back of it. Whitlatch drove into one of the traps, then chopped out into another until he had consumed 15 strokes on the hole, which prevented him from qualifying. In playing the same hole in the qualifying round Jerome D. Travers reached the depths of one of these traps from the tee. He calmly picked out under penalty of two strokes, laid his fourth dead, and went down in a five.

Perhaps a slight indication of the

sort of practice that is necessary may be extracted from the painstaking study of Mr. Travers. It has been reported that he would frequently go out on the links with his pocket full of balls, armed only with a niblick. He would then place the ball in most impossible spots and study the results from each stroke. Another day he would take out a masher, another a mid-iron, and so on down the list of clubs, until he learned exactly what he might expect to accomplish from any odd point off the fair green.

Compared with most other players, Mr. Travers can be depended on to get into difficulties less often than anyone I have ever seen play, yet he has made himself a past master of traps and bunkers, and is never embarrassed by any situation.

For the beginner who has not yet acquired sufficient skill to beat a card of one hundred for a round hole, advice is rather to be sure of getting out on the fair green than to try for distance or any definite point. In doing this, however, try to remember exactly what happens on the stroke and store it away carefully in the mind for reference next time you are called upon to make a similar effort. In this way you can derive benefits from your early practice, which otherwise would go for little or nothing.

The very best of players find themselves in tough spots every now and then and time you are called upon to make a judgment in order to get out of their predicament without seriously marring their card, losing a hole.

They have the advantage over the duffer in a number of ways. They have been in similar spots before, and know what club to use and what strength they can effectively apply on the stroke without danger of getting into a still worse mess. They can quickly decide whether to play backwards, sideways, or toward the hole, and then by a slight shift in the means of getting to the green sometimes go down for a half with bobby, and at worst only lose a single stroke for their wild shot.

In the golfing championship of the United States, played at Baltusrol some years ago, one of the leading professionals, in playing the ninth hole there, hooked his ball into the clump of woods. He was a man who had a reputation to sustain, and would not play backwards or sideways, so kept hitting first one tree and then another, and so took seven or eight strokes. (I forget which) on a par three hole, on the theory "that a pro never plays backwards." The hole in question is one of about 180 yards along a side hill. A simple stroke toward the fair green, and he could have scored a four, several strokes under what he actually got.

In the qualifying round of the amateur championship several years ago at Garden City, Marshall Whitlatch, one of the most promising players in the metropolitan district, met with grave misfortune in playing the 160 yard 18th hole. The drive is over a pond to a large rolling fair green with two deep traps cut in its face and others at the back of it. Whitlatch drove into one of the traps, then chopped out into another until he had consumed 15 strokes on the hole, which prevented him from qualifying. In playing the same hole in the qualifying round Jerome D. Travers reached the depths of one of these traps from the tee. He calmly picked out under penalty of two strokes, laid his fourth dead, and went down in a five.

Perhaps a slight indication of the

sort of practice that is necessary may be extracted from the painstaking study of Mr. Travers. It has been reported that he would frequently go out on the links with his pocket full of balls, armed only with a niblick. He would then place the ball in most impossible spots and study the results from each stroke. Another day he would take out a masher, another a mid-iron, and so on down the list of clubs, until he learned exactly what he might expect to accomplish from any odd point off the fair green.

Compared with most other players, Mr. Travers can be depended on to get into difficulties less often than anyone I have ever seen play, yet he has made himself a past master of traps and bunkers, and is never embarrassed by any situation.

For the beginner who has not yet acquired sufficient skill to beat a card of one hundred for a round hole, advice is rather to be sure of getting out on the fair green than to try for distance or any definite point. In doing this, however, try to remember exactly what happens on the stroke and store it away carefully in the mind for reference next time you are called upon to make a similar effort. In this way you can derive benefits from your early practice, which otherwise would go for little or nothing.

The very best of players find themselves in tough spots every now and then and time you are called upon to make a judgment in order to get out of their predicament without seriously marring their card, losing a hole.

They have the advantage over the duffer in a number of ways. They have been in similar spots before, and know what club to use and what strength they can effectively apply on the stroke without danger of getting into a still worse mess. They can quickly decide whether to play backwards, sideways, or toward the hole, and then by a slight shift in the means of getting to the green sometimes go down for a half with bobby, and at worst only lose a single stroke for their wild shot.

In the golfing championship of the United States, played at Baltusrol some years ago, one of the leading professionals, in playing the ninth hole there, hooked his ball into the clump of woods. He was a man who had a reputation to sustain, and would not play backwards or sideways, so kept hitting first one tree and then another, and so took seven or eight strokes. (I forget which) on a par three hole, on the theory "that a pro never plays backwards." The hole in question is one of about 180 yards along a side hill. A simple stroke toward the fair green, and he could have scored a four, several strokes under what he actually got.

In the qualifying round of the amateur championship several years ago at Garden City, Marshall Whitlatch, one of the most promising players in the metropolitan district, met with grave misfortune in playing the 160 yard 18th hole. The drive is over a pond to a large rolling fair green with two deep traps cut in its face and others at the back of it. Whitlatch drove into one of the traps, then chopped out into another until he had consumed 15 strokes on the hole, which prevented him from qualifying. In playing the same hole in the qualifying round Jerome D. Travers reached the depths of one of these traps from the tee. He calmly picked out under penalty of two strokes, laid his fourth dead, and went down in a five.

Perhaps a slight indication of the

sort of practice that is necessary may be extracted from the painstaking study of Mr. Travers. It has been reported that he would frequently go out on the links with his pocket full of balls, armed only with a niblick. He would then place the ball in most impossible spots and study the results from each stroke. Another day he would take out a masher, another a mid-iron, and so on down the list of clubs, until he learned exactly what he might expect to accomplish from any odd point off the fair green.

Compared with most other players, Mr. Travers can be depended on to get into difficulties less often than anyone I have ever seen play, yet he has made himself a past master of traps and bunkers, and is never embarrassed by any situation.

For the beginner who has not yet acquired sufficient skill to beat a card of one hundred for a round hole, advice is rather to be sure of getting out on the fair green than to try for distance or any definite point. In doing this, however, try to remember exactly what happens on the stroke and store it away carefully in the mind for reference next time you are called upon to make a similar effort. In this way you can derive benefits from your early practice, which otherwise would go for little or nothing.

The very best of players find themselves in tough spots every now and then and time you are called upon to make a judgment in order to get out of their predicament without seriously marring their card, losing a hole.

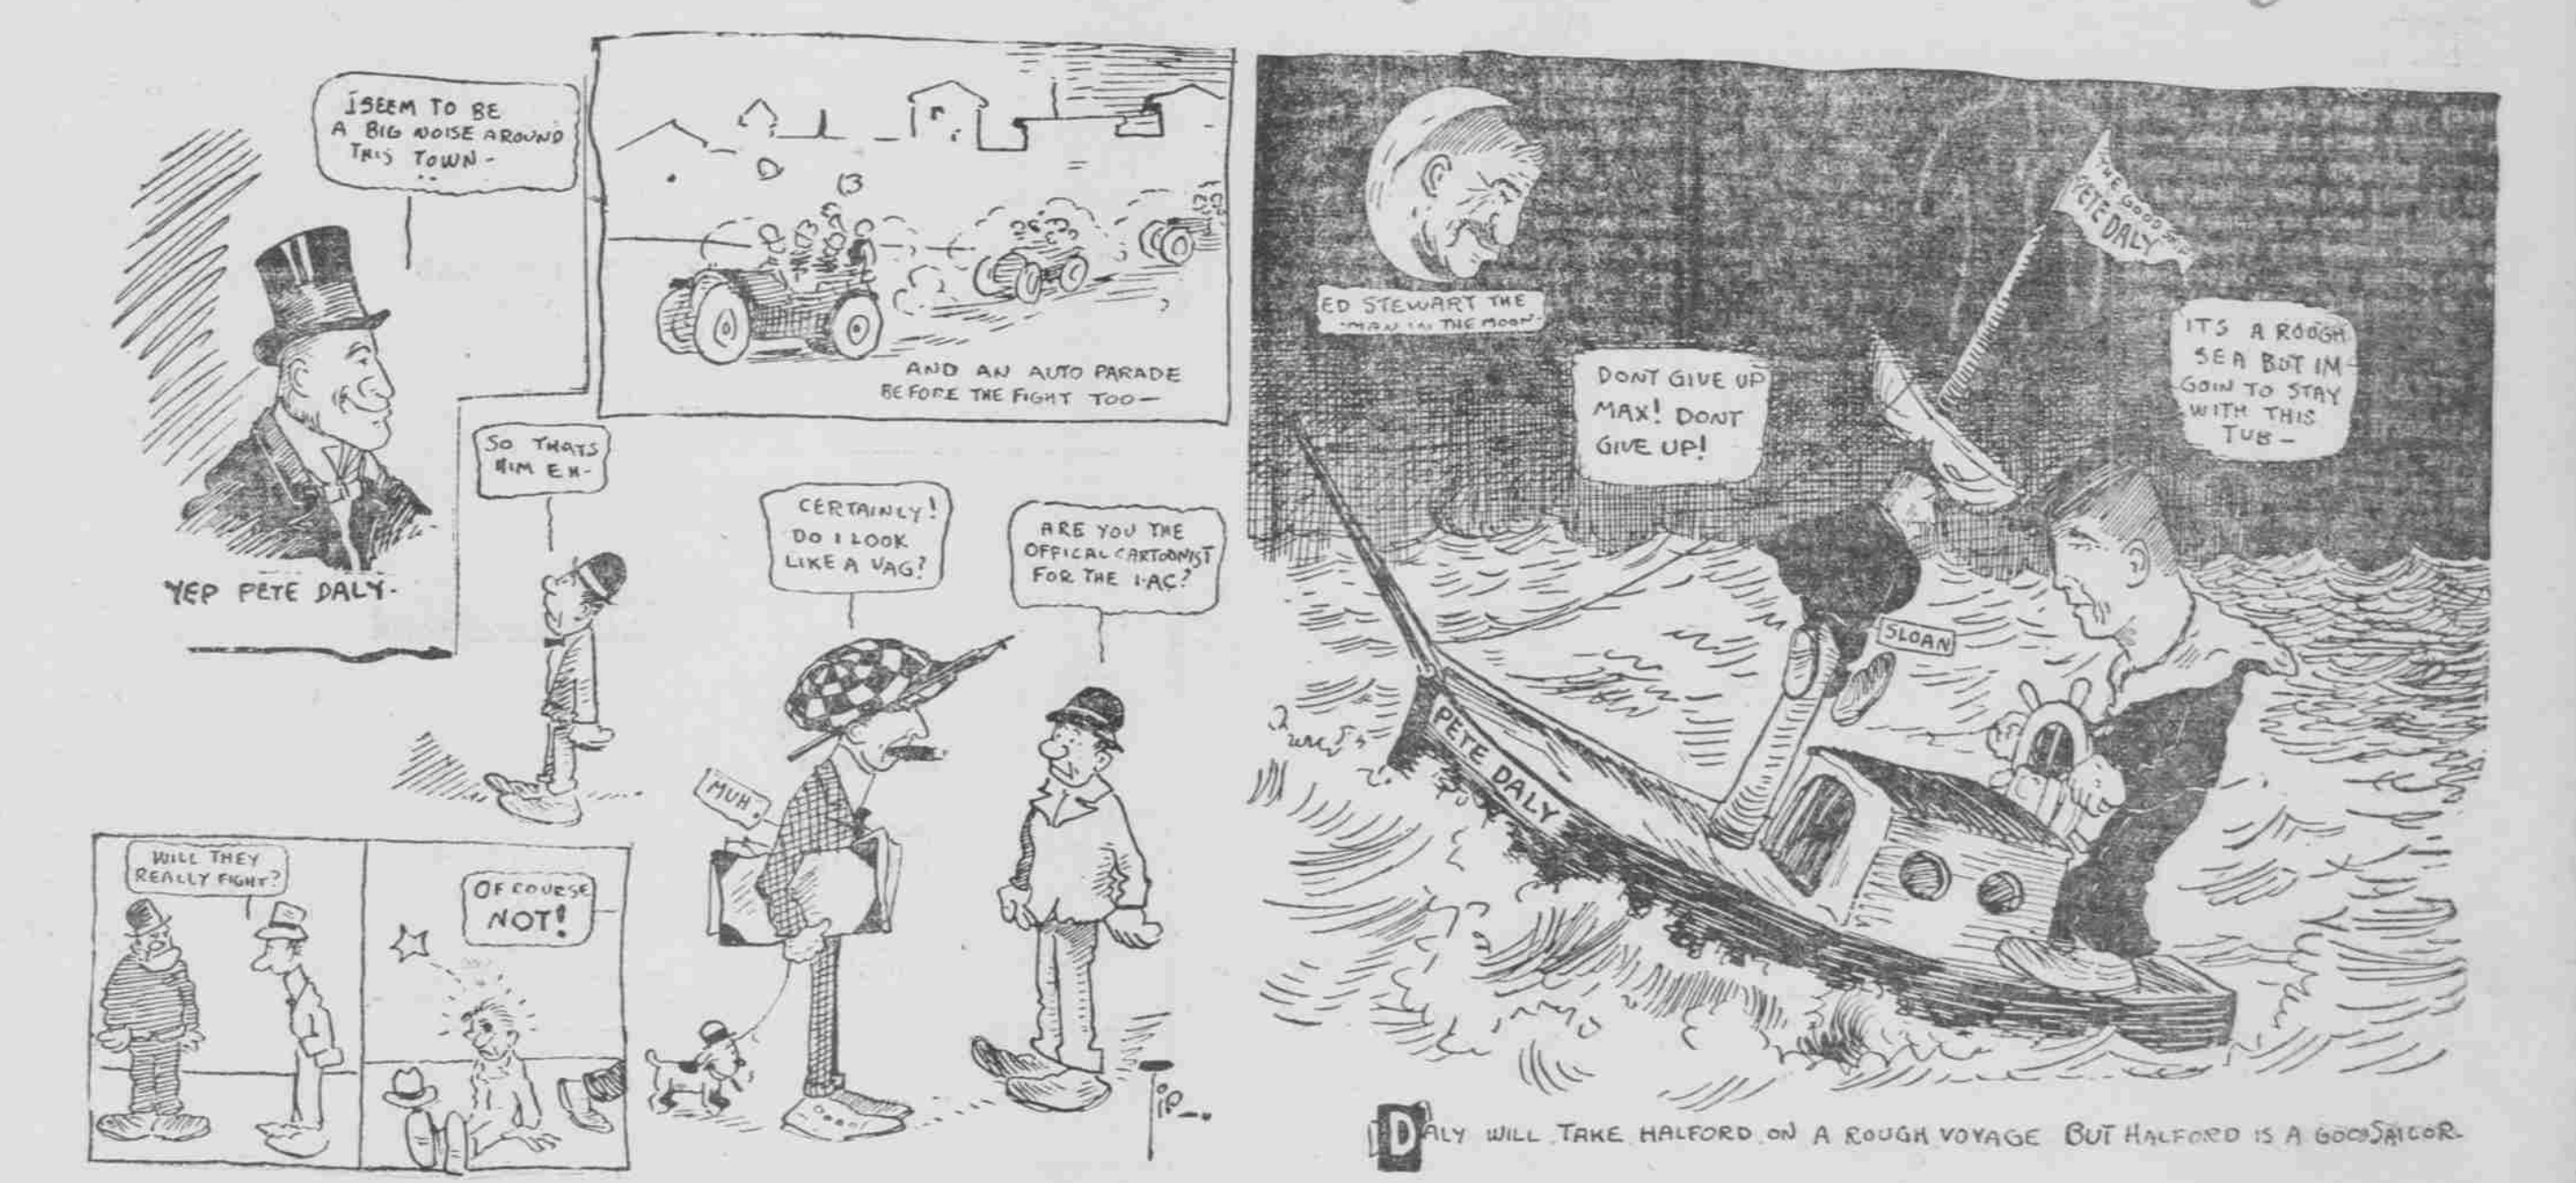

They have the advantage over the duffer in a number of ways. They have been in similar spots before, and know what club to use and what strength they can effectively apply on the stroke without danger of getting into a still worse mess. They can quickly decide whether to play backwards, sideways, or toward the hole, and then by a slight shift in the means of getting to the green sometimes go down for a half with bobby, and at worst only lose a single stroke for their wild shot.

In the golfing championship of the United States, played at Baltusrol some years ago, one of the leading professionals, in playing the ninth hole there, hooked his ball into the clump of woods. He was a man who had a reputation to sustain, and would not play backwards or sideways, so kept hitting first one tree and then another, and so took seven or eight strokes. (I forget which) on a par three hole, on the theory "that a pro never plays backwards." The hole in question is one of about 180 yards along a side hill. A simple stroke toward the fair green, and he could have scored a four, several strokes under what he actually got.

In the qualifying round of the amateur championship several years ago at Garden City, Marshall Whitlatch, one of the most promising players in the metropolitan district, met with grave misfortune in playing the 160 yard 18th hole. The drive is over a pond to a large rolling fair green with two deep traps cut in its face and others at the back of it. Whitlatch drove into one of the traps, then chopped out into another until he had consumed 15 strokes on the hole, which prevented him from qualifying. In playing the same hole in the qualifying round Jerome D. Travers reached the depths of one of these traps from the tee. He calmly picked out under penalty of two strokes, laid his fourth dead, and went down in a five.

Perhaps a slight indication of the

Sailor Halford Will Have Ability Tested In a Rough Sea

DALEY WILL TAKE HALFORD ON A ROUGH VOYAGE BUT HALFORD IS A GOOD SAILOR.